

This column contains vertical text, likely a list of geographical coordinates or place names corresponding to the map's grid. The text is faint and difficult to read, but appears to be organized in a structured manner, possibly providing latitude and longitude values for various locations marked on the map.

This central column contains several paragraphs of text, which appear to be descriptive notes or a legend for the map. The text is very faint and mostly illegible due to fading and the age of the paper. It likely provides details about the geographical features, political boundaries, or historical context of the regions shown in the map.

This column contains additional text, possibly further geographical descriptions or a continuation of the notes from the central column. Like the other text, it is extremely faint and largely unreadable. It may contain specific information about the regions of Asia depicted on the map.
